

The painting depicts a serene Tuscan landscape. In the foreground, there are lush green olive trees with detailed leaves. Behind them, a cluster of buildings with terracotta roofs is visible, including a prominent white stone church with a square bell tower topped with a crenellated roof. To the right of the church, a tall, slender cypress tree stands out against the sky. The background shows rolling green hills under a bright blue sky with soft, white clouds. The overall style is characteristic of the Macchiaioli movement, with visible brushstrokes and a focus on light and color.

MARC DALESSIO
Recent Paintings

Marc Dalessio has crafted an enviable life as a painter. In addition to his prolific output, he is also a generous teacher, a craftsman, an entrepreneur, an art historian, an internet blogger and occasionally even finds himself an international emissary of classical painting. The engine behind Dalessio's efforts is a love of nature combined with an unfettered passion to paint everyday, most of the day.

Dalessio (b.1972), a gifted draftsman, has been painting full time since graduating Phi Beta Kappa from University of California in Santa Cruz in 1992 where he focused on both biology and art. After university, he moved to Florence, Italy, and spent another 8 years studying with Svetlan Kracsyna at the Ill Bisonte International School of Graphic Arts, where he earned a Masters in Printmaking. He also spent many years studying and teaching in Charles Cecil Studios in Florence, and more recently taught at the Florence Academy of Art. He has also just opened his own atelier, "Donatello, 31" on the edge of Florence's historic district.

Dalessio's search for beauty has taken him to some of the more exotic corners of our planet. He travels - sometimes on his own, but often with a group of like-minded plein air painters - to world renowned landscapes, including but not limited to Kuki Gallman's ranch in Kenya, a castle in Rajasthan, a barge on the Seine in France, a chalet in Switzerland, and a village in Myanmar (Burma). Dalessio has been painting on the East End of Long Island since 2000, adding Shelter Island and Sag Harbor to his visual travelogue.

Interestingly, on his blog (www.marcdallessio.com), he says that the beauty in a place like Rajasthan can be overwhelming, and create a small panic that one may leave this gorgeous place without capturing its magnificence. He goes on to say that some of the most memorable landscape paintings he has seen often depict simple and unremarkable scenes, which would have gone unobserved by most.

Dalessio's generosity with his experience is representative of this classical realist atelier movement, where most painters understand that they need peers around them in order to improve. As a rigorous traditionalist, Dalessio grinds most of his own paint, and has even posted color swatches of his research into the various pigments on his blog. He offers a plethora of relevant and helpful information and interesting art history tidbits, from how to transport canvases internationally to what camera to use to photograph one's work to the English and Cyrillic name of a little known 19th century landscape painter that wowed him in a recent trip to Russia.

Dalessio is living the life most painters and aesthetes aspire to live. His process is supported by his gallery sales, his thriving portraiture business, and his recently opened atelier, where he and several other painters are passing on this highly refined visual language that almost died from neglect during the last part of the 20th century.
